Red Road To Take Part In Groundbreaking New Health Study

Welcome to the first edition of the GoWell Newsletter. GoWell is a new research programme that will be coming to the Red Road over the next few weeks. 700 local residents will be asked to take part, along with 7000 other households from 12 different communities across Glasgow.

Over the next 10 years more than a billion pounds will be invested in Glasgow's homes and communities, and Red Road and the surrounding area is expected to benefit from this investment. But how will we know if the money spent on improving and regenerating the Red Road has actually created the kinds of homes and community that local people want to live in? Well that's where GoWell comes in – we would like to find out from you what you think of efforts to improve and regenerate the Red Road and if all this investment has had an effect on your health and well-being.

By taking part in the GoWell study you will be able to tell those organisations responsible for neighbourhood renewal and community regeneration what works in your area and what doesn't. We realise it is only by speaking to local residents that the GoWell team will be able to find out if there are links between your health, home and community.

GoWell was officially launched in February this year by Community Minister Malcolm Chisholm. Mr Chisholm is pictured here alongside local community housing representatives and the GoWell Research Team.

Introduction

PROFESSOR
ADE KEARNS

GoWell is the first research and learning programme of its kind in Europe. It aims to find out from local people what they think of the efforts to improve Glasgow's homes and communities and if these improvements have had an impact on their health and well being.

Over one billion pounds will be invested in community regeneration and neighbourhood renewal in the next 10 years. We would like to find out during this time if all this investment is producing the kinds of homes and communities that people want to live in.

In addition, a major driving force behind the GoWell programme is our commitment to ensure that the views of local people are taken into account by those responsible for making decisions about future regeneration initiatives. To do this the GoWell team will produce high quality research that will engage directly with local people, policy makers and practitioners.

The GoWell programme will provide those responsible for health, housing and regeneration with the best possible information on which to base decisions for transforming Glasgow's homes and communities. We expect that the answers provided by the GoWell programme will be of great relevance to local people, local communities, local housing organisations and to urban policy makers around the world.

The GoWell programme has brought together a team of some of the UK's most experienced researchers on one of the most important regeneration and health studies ever to be undertaken in Europe.

Who will be doing the interviews?

BMG research, a well known independent research company, will be carrying out interviews with local people on behalf of the GoWell team. The information local people give the BMG interviewers will be held in the strictest confidence and will not be shown or passed onto any other organisation. Similarly, no one will ever be able to identify people, who have taken part in the interview from the answers they give.

Here is a sneak preview of what the interviewers will ask...

Here are some of the topics we would like your opinion on as part of the GoWell programme. In particular we would like to know what you think about:

- Your home and community
- Your health, lifestyle and general wellbeing and that of your family
- Local services, such as housing, transport and leisure facilities, and
- Any changes that are planned for your community

How will the GoWell results be used to improve Glasgow's homes and communities?

Your opinion on these important matters will help the GoWell team to build a picture of what it is like to live in the Red Road and the surrounding area and what local people would like done to improve the area. The GoWell team will use what local people tell us to help those organisations responsible for regenerating and renewing the Red Road area. Local community based housing organisations will then be able to use this information to work out what kinds of investments are effective in improving the lives of local people and the places they live in.

COMMUNITIES TAKING PART IN GoWell

12 communities have been selected to participate in GoWell. These are Carntyne, Castlemilk, Drumchapel, Gorbals Riverside, Govan, Red Road and the surrounding area, Riddrie, St. Andrew's Drive, Scotstoun, Shawbridge Corridor, Sighthill and Townhead.

IT'S ALL ABOUT YOU, YOUR FAMILY AND YOUR COMMUNITY

Red Road the place to be: THEN AND NOW

We spoke to long standing Red Road resident Andrew Jamieson to find out what it was like to live in the Red Road multi storey flats when they were first built in the 1960's. We also asked Andrew to tell us about how the area has changed over the past 40 years and what kind of improvements he feels would be of most benefit to the area.

Andrew spoke with great enthusiasm of the vibrant and thriving community that was the Red Road when he and his daughter moved to the area in the 1960's. He remembers fondly the excitement and anticipation of moving into a brand new home:

"I thought the area was a nice place to live and was quite pleased with my new house. It was good to have my own fitted kitchen, bathroom and plenty of space for my daughter."

Andrew recalls a strong proud community that often socialised together:

"I used to know a lot of my neighbours and we quite often got together and socialised at the weekends. All round this was a nice place to live and people kept the area very clean and tidy."

And now

Andrew told us that over the past 20 years the Red Road has been experiencing serious decline, and is very disappointed that such a good community has been allowed to become so run down. He feels that decline is a direct result of the council not investing sufficiently in essential interior and exterior maintenance and repairs:

"I think the council is responsible for the area looking so run down. They have never really maintained the area and with that a lot of the families who have been here a long time have moved away to get a better standard of living."

A further problem seems to be the lack of leisure facilities for not only children and young people but for the whole community:

"I used to know a lot of my neighbours and we quite often got together and socialised at the weekends. All round this was a nice place to live and people kept the area very clean and tidy."

"There is nothing in the area for the kids and teenagers to do, and the play areas are very small. I am hoping it will help when Petershill is developed into a sports centre. At the moment I have to travel to Castlemilk to play bowls and I would like more of these kinds of activities made available locally."

What improvements would you like to make to your community area?

Andrew feels that the area urgently needs regeneration investment and welcomes plans to demolish one of the tower blocks. But he also pointed out that other improvements would need to happen alongside the demolition and reconstruction of new homes:

"The Red Road used to be a good place all round and if we are to get back to that the housing organisations will have to maintain the flats. People need to feel proud of where they live."

Andrew's strong sense of belonging and commitment to the Red Road alongside investment in regenerating the area offers hope for transforming the whole community.

Being an Asylum Seeker in Glasgow

We went to speak with Sivaparatham Kumaravelu and Anton Kanapathipillai at their allotment to find out more about being an asylum seeker in Glasgow.

In the beginning both men and their families found it difficult to integrate into their new communities. They felt this was because a minority of their new neighbours were unhappy with asylum seekers using limited local resources.

As Sivaparatham explains:

"When my family were housed here in 2001 there were not enough play areas or facilities for the children and young people. Local residents were very unhappy that our children were using the play areas; the play areas are only very small."

"I can understand that local people were worried we were taking over but as we settled in and got to know each other, we started to understand a bit more about each other."

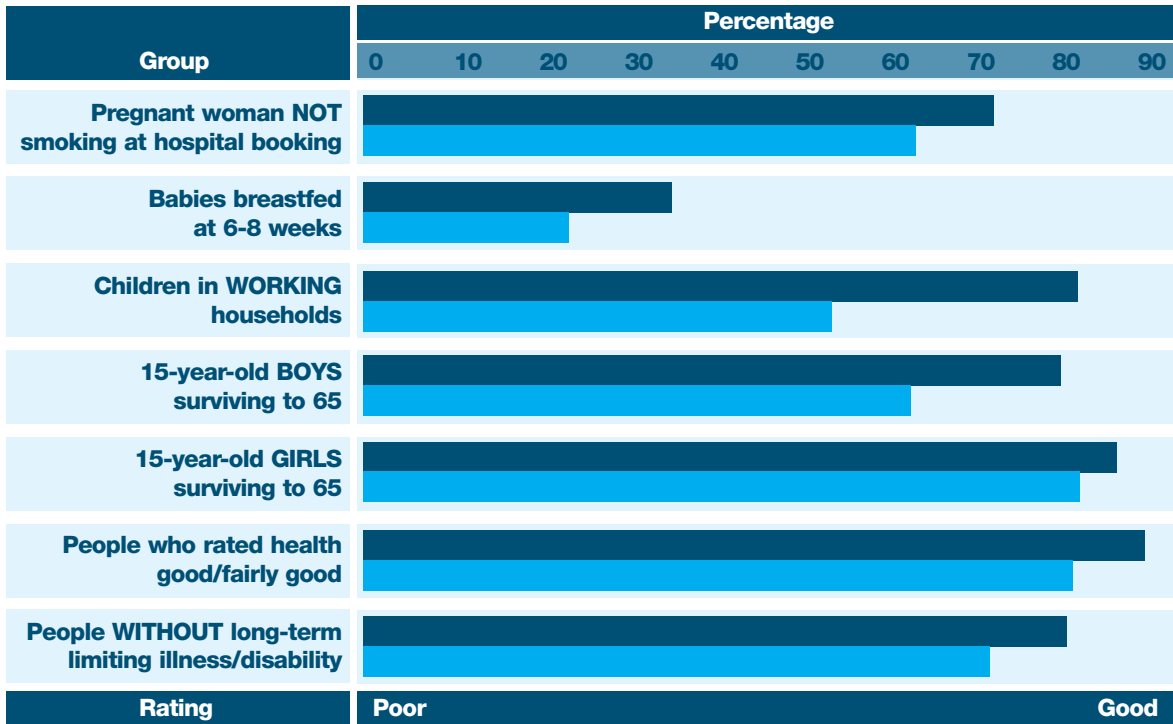

Once the families became settled in their new community and learned to speak English they had very positive and enthusiastic things to say about the help and support they received from local residents, community organisations and local community groups:

"Since arriving in Glasgow in 2001 there have been big changes in local attitudes to people seeking asylum here. I feel that my neighbours and community make me and my family feel very welcome and part of this community."

Both men felt that the community was highly responsive to the needs of asylum seekers and had played a key role in assisting them and their families to become part of the local community. They both were highly appreciative of the dedication and hard work of local volunteers in supporting them to forge a new life in Glasgow.

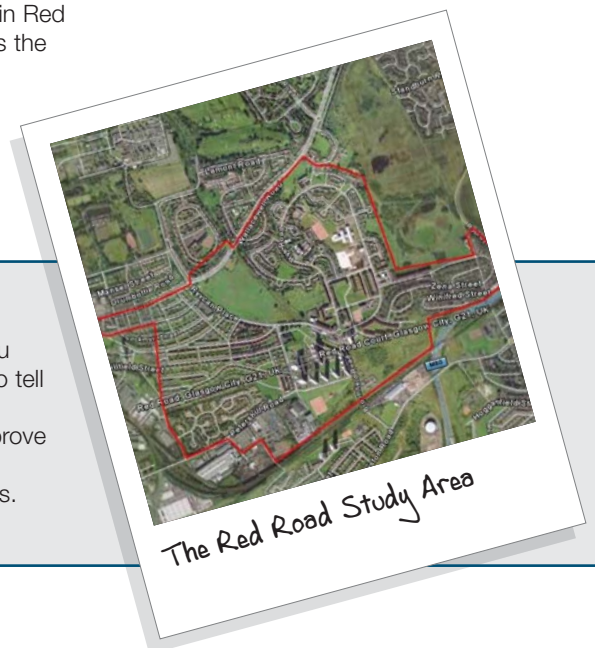

We thought you would like to know how the health and wellbeing indicators of Red Road residents compares with the rest of Scotland.*

■ Scotland ■ Red Road

*Data from NHS Health Scotland, for postcode sector G21 4, various years and sources, including 2001 Census.

As you can see the bar shows that all aspects of the health of the people living in Red Road is markedly worse than for Scotland as a whole. This observation provides the GoWell team with a springboard for action over the next ten years.

About the GoWell Newsletter

The GoWell Newsletter will be published 3 times each year and is written for you and your community by the GoWell research team. We will use the newsletter to tell you about what we have found out about your local community and keep you informed as to how the information you provide us with will be used to help improve Glasgow's homes and communities in the future. We would also welcome any contributions, ideas or suggestions you might have for future GoWell newsletters. Simply send or email your news to the following address:
